Snow dumps in Colorado and Utah

Over a foot of snow fell in some resorts in America's mid west over the weekend

Winter hasn't loosened its grip on Colorado and Utah quite yet with resorts reporting some significant dumps over the weekend. Sunday 10 April brought as much as 30cm of snow to Alta and 28cm to The Canyons, with both Utah resorts currently reporting powder conditions both on and off piste.

The Canyons (pictured right in early April) announced in March that it would extend its season by an extra week until 17 April thanks to the snowfall received this season, which currently stands at a cumulative total just short of 10m. "The season ain't over yet, baby! Come get some April Pow!" the resort tweeted on Saturday 9 April.

In Colorado, both Beaver Creek and Vail reported 18cm of snow on Sunday and there was also 15cm at Winter Park. Similar levels also fell in Big Sky, Montana, and in Solitude, Utah, on Sunday. With a 389cm snow base, Solitude told snow fans to "forget about road bikes, beaches and golf clubs" in a tweet on Saturday.

Whilst the season continues in a strong vein in some resorts in Colorado and Utah, operations have come to a close in Crested Butte, Deer Valley, Durango, Keystone, Steamboat and Telluride.
